Reading

Read the start of the detective story.

Crime story

Rosa was looking at Harry Frampton's picture. 'Look at his eyes,' she said. 'He was a terrible person. I'm happy that somebody murdered him.'

'That's a terrible thing to say about our father, Rosa!' said Alfred, angrily. 'It was an accident.'

'Was it? We're both very rich now,' said Rosa.

At that moment Pearson the cook came in with coffee for everybody.

'Ah Pearson, I want to talk to you,' said Detective Mathers. 'Did Lord Frampton take a cup of coffee after dinner?' he asked.

'Yes, he did. After dinner Lord Frampton went to the study with Eleanor and I brought them some coffee and his medicine.'

The detective turned to Eleanor. 'You were Harry's secretary and you were with him before he died. What were you doing?'

'We were working. He wanted to write some letters,' she said.

'Did he drink the coffee?' the detective asked.

'Yes, he did,' said Eleanor. 'He drank his coffee and took his medicine but then he said 'I have a headache. I'm going to go to bed.' He was walking up the stairs when he fell and hit his head. It's terrible!' Eleanor started to cry.

At that moment, a policeman came into the room. He gave the detective a small bottle. 'I found this outside, sir' said the policeman.

The detective looked at Alfred. 'And where were you at eight o'clock this evening, Alfred?'

'I was outside. I went for a walk after dinner,' said Alfred. 'I was standing outside when I heard people shouting. When I ran back to the house my father was lying on the stairs and he was dead.'

'It's snowing, but you went for a walk outside?' The detective smiled. 'Now a question for you, Eleanor. Were you wearing your glasses when Harry died?'

'No. I wasn't. I lost them before lunch. But why is that important?'
