5 Read the article about Bob Willis. Are the statements true (T) or false (F) or doesn't it say (DS)?

Crime writing from experience

I met author Bob Willis in his country cottage in Dorset, where he lives with his wife and three dogs. We talked in his study where he wrote his new best-selling crime story. The dogs lay at his feet. They are large wolfhounds. The sort of dog you'd expect to find in a crime novel, but Bob insisted there was nothing dangerous about them. He bought them because he likes walking in the hills and wanted someone (or something) to go with him.

I asked him what it was like to become rich and famous with his very first novel. He laughed and told me that he wasn't making a fortune but the extra money was useful. Fortune or no fortune, Bob has become a celebrity in his home village. He says he finds it difficult when strangers recognize him in the street, and he doesn't know what to say to them.

Bob is an ex-detective who retired to become a crime novelist. He worked on several murder investigations, which were where he got a lot of ideas for his story of a wave of killings between rival drug gangs. He says he doesn't miss his old life. He prefers the excitement of finding out how many people have bought his book. It comes out in paperback next week. Read it!
