Why do companies outsource?

When a company outsources, it hires an outside organization to take over something the company would typically do for itself. (It is also called offshoring when a company hires an organization located in a foreign country.) Outsourcing has become a hot trend in the economic marketplace, and there are excellent reasons why.

- Better focus. In many companies, managers often get caught up in unimportant but necessary details that take up a lot of their time and energy. 1. _____
- Lower cost. Companies can often save a lot of money by outsourcing relatively routine business tasks such as the preparation of payroll checks or the handling of customer questions and complaints. 2. _____ The resulting savings get passed on to the outsourcing company.

- Greater efficiency and speed. When work is outsourced to companies in different time zones, the company can still be getting work done when most employees in the home company are away from their jobs. 3. _____
- Access to unavailable expertise. Outsourcing may enable a company to gain access to skills it does not currently possess. 4. _____ Often, a company that outsources its work would find it very difficult and expensive to develop these abilities on its own.

- For example, by hiring the services of companies based in Ireland and India, a U.S. company can take advantage of a 24-hour work cycle.
- Some organizations that provide outsourcing services have world-class reputations and have built up capabilities in many specialized areas.
- Many of these companies lose money and decrease in productivity.
- These services cost less to outsource because the companies that provide them often have far lower labor expenses.
- By outsourcing these day-to-day functions, a company can let its employees concentrate on the jobs they do best.
