(Track 8)

Andy Kate, what do you want to do on our wedding anniversary? It's coming up pretty soon. Do you want to celebrate like we usually do – just the two of us at our favorite restaurant? You know, Carey's?

Kate Um, maybe we should do something a little different this year – because it's our fifth. Um, I was thinking . . . why don't we have some of our family and close friends come here? Now that we have this great new apartment, we have so much room. I could cook something special.

Andy Sure, I guess we could, but . . . I mean, I know how you love to cook and everything, but isn't that an awful lot of work? Wouldn't it be easier just to invite everyone to a restaurant?

Kate Yeah, but this place is so great, and none of our friends have even seen it yet. Um, maybe we could ask people to bring some of the food.

Andy So everyone brings food to share? Like a potluck? Honestly, that sounds kind of strange for an anniversary party. Besides, who could you get to cook? All of our friends are so busy. . . .

Kate Hmm. You've got a point there. . . . Well, how about this? We could have Carey's Restaurant do the main course and the side dishes – their grilled fish with vegetables is my favorite. I can make a big salad.

Andy OK. I guess that'll work. What about dessert? We should probably have a cake or something. After all, it's an anniversary party! I could make one. . . . Or maybe we could ask a guest to bring one.

Kate Hmm. I have an idea – we could have the bakery next door make us a fabulous cake. Maybe chocolate or something.

Andy Great idea! Hmm. But what'll we do about the apartment? This place needs a good cleaning.

Kate Well, maybe we can get a cleaning service to come in a couple of days before. . . .
